It may be time to change

If your strata company is not delivering on your expectations, it may be easier than you think to make the change. Changing strata managers might sound complex, but in the right hands it can be a smooth and painless transition. Things must be done in the correct order, with all the boxes ticked, to ensure compliance and to avoid expensive mistakes.

01 Line up your replacement

Before you consider letting your current strata manager go, make sure you have a new and better replacement waiting in the wings. Arrange a shortlist of strata management companies to provide quotes, and select the best candidate.

02 Check your agreement

Obtain a copy of the management agreement from your current manager to determine the expiration date and the termination period required.

03 Contact the owners

Get hold of the strata roll, also from your manager, and contact each of the owners to advise that an extraordinary general meeting is being held.

04 Issue the agenda

Provide a meeting agenda to all owners containing the date, time and venue of the EGM, giving at least 14 days notice, along with a motion to confirm the minutes of the previous meeting and a motion to terminate the current agreement and appoint the new strata manager.

05 Hold the EGM

The meeting can be held at the strata complex for convenience, and there is no obligation to inform or invite the outgoing manager.

06 Pass the motion

At the meeting the motion needs to be passed by the majority of owners, either in person or by proxy vote.

07 We take it from here

Once the vote has been passed and the minutes recorded, your new strata manager takes over the rest of the process, including informing the previous manager of their termination and arranging collection of the records after the appropriate notice period.

We can guide you through every step

We will attend your EGM if required and can supply a generic agenda and minutes template if you need one. To find out more, book a free consultation at strataunited.com.au.
